head coaches and supervisor to all other head coaches and national team technical personnel, cultivating a strong working relationship with each of them to become a trusted resource.

On an as-needed basis, the Sporting Director attends senior and youth national team training camps and communicates regularly with coaches outside of these events. They also provide administrative oversight to ensure Canada Soccer's national teams follow all tournament rules and players' association mandates.

In addition, working alongside the senior national team head coaches and other technical leaders, the Sporting Director will institutionalize the federation's national sporting identity and broadly communicate it to stakeholders across Canada. The national sporting identity is based on the game models, sporting philosophies, styles of play, positional archetypes, and KPIs utilized by the current senior national team head coaches, with the goal of building consistent and stable long-term identities for Canada's men's and women's national teams and high-performance soccer ecosystem. The Sporting Director will thus collaborate with stakeholders across Canada – including provincial and territorial associations, clubs, and coaches – to help inspire alignment with the national sporting identity.

On occasion, the Sporting Director will participate alongside the CEO or other Canada Soccer personnel in fundraising meetings and events with donors and corporate partners. They will be able to communicate persuasively about the vision and growth plan for Canadian soccer and the national team system to inspire confidence with potential supporters.
